Micro-Botox goes mainstream

According to New York dermatologist Dr. Debbie Palmer, micro-Botox is destined to be a trend in dermatologist offices next year. “Micro-Botox is injected more superficially, in the dermal layer of skin, and in smaller quantities than a normal Botox treatment, and it works to decrease pore size, smooth skin and decrease oil production.” Dr. Marotta says microfiller injections in areas where skin wrinkles have been shown to stimulate the body’s production of collagen for a longer-lasting effect. “This technique has become very popular in Europe.”
